PRESIDENT'S REPORT

The good news is that we are returning to the Mount Waverley Community Centre for our August meeting. It's undergone major renovations, so it will be interesting to see how it's been transformed. (For the past two meetings we've met at a hall in Ashwood.)

I'm undergoing another change in my life at the moment. At the end of June my husband Phil closed his business and retired. We've had to incorporate so much into our home, including files, stationery and equipment. We found that used commercial furniture is really hard to dispose of so it's been quite time consuming. I'm looking forward to us both being able to relax soon.

Of course my own business is still going strongly and I'm pleased to say it's becoming busier again, which is really great.

Recently I visited the Gippsland farm of one of my dowsing students. It was a get-together with a few of my students for a review. We had a wonderful time dowsing for geopathic stress and scrambling the energy to clear it. We also dowsed to help one of the horses which hadn't been well. Dowsing indicated low energy so we worked on it and he's responded well.

I'm looking forward to our next DSV meeting when we will have a Panel of experienced dowsers at the front, ready to answer questions. In the meantime, have a think about what you'd like help with for your dowsing and come along and ask our Panel. Meanwhile, let's keep dowsing!

OUR NEXT MEETING

At our next meeting on 26 August, we'll have a Dowsing Panel of experienced dowsers out the front, ready for group discussion and importantly, to answer dowsing questions you may have.

As with everything, there's usually more than one way to resolve a problem. The Panel will give you the opportunity to hear varying views from different people, based on their own experiences.

Of course, it's always wonderful to receive input from those attending on the day too. Members and visitors often provide many variations and solutions to what's being asked. There is such a breadth of dowsing experience among our DSV people and sharing like this can open up a true treasure trove.

OUR LAST MEETING

Our DSV President, Lyn Wood presented at our last meeting in June. Lyn provides living history for the DSV. She was introduced to dowsing by a family friend, George Williams, founder of the DSV.

He was considered a bit eccentric because he did things outside the norm. George offered to show Lyn how to dowse with keys (or a pendulum) to check for vitamins, minerals and to use rods to find streams of underground water. He knew then that such water often holds damaging energy, especially when it runs under beds or favourite places in the home. He taught her that when the body becomes stressed from such energy it can often develop into illness.

George was an engineer who learned to locate pipes under roads from a fellow from the old Gas & Fuel Co. George's fascination grew and he practiced in various situations. It led to him starting The Dowsing & Radiesthesia Society of Victoria in 1975. The group was incorporated in 1997 and the name became the Dowsing Society of Vic Inc (DSV). Lyn became Secretary and that role lasted for nine years. She graduated to become Vice-President and then President in 2008. Today Lyn uses all that she's learned to help others through her business, "Gently Does It".

George Williams passed in 2004, and fortunately for us, his work continues to live on through our DSV President, Lyn Wood.

HEALING THE DEPARTED

A welcome new article from DSV Life Member, Mick Moran, assisted by a friend, Sophie.

Do the departed need our help? Up until about 12 months ago I would have said no. I believed once a person had died and moved on to the next part of their journey, they were at peace and all was well. But a number of encounters recently had me thinking this is no longer true.

One evening I was talking to my friend, Sophie, on the phone. She was telling me of the very difficult time her parents had during their early life, with members of their families dying from starvation, or being killed by the Russians.

As teenagers, they both separately had escaped from different Soviet Gulags in Siberia, before WW2. They met each other after they joined the Allied Forces. At the end of the war, they were classed as 'Displaced Persons' and were moved through a number of refugee camps around Europe, until a permanent home could be found. By this stage they had three children under five years of age, which made it even harder for them.

Eventually they were repatriated to Australia where they started a new life, a life which was much better than the one they left behind, but not quite the happy ending they had hoped for. There was no recognition, let alone treatment, for Post Natal Depression (PTSD), as the family quickly grew, with six children struggling with poverty and illness. Sophie told me her parent's hard life was never far from the surface and they both struggled emotionally throughout the rest of their lives.

As Sophie was telling me this, I had a connection from the spirit world. This doesn't happen often, but when it does, it usually proves quite interesting. It didn't take long before I worked out who it was. It was Sophie's mother. I told Sophie I had made contact with her mother, and of course, she asked what her mother wanted.

I wasn't sure what she wanted, as I didn't have two-way communication with her, but I could feel she wasn't at peace. Had the traumas of her life carried through after her death? I didn't know, but I now knew exactly what she was after, and who should give it to her. I told Sophie that her mother had not yet found peace and was in need of some healing.

I said, "It's best if it comes from you, as you are her daughter. All you need to do to bring your mother peace is to send the most powerful healing I know of. If you could send her Love and Peace, I'm sure things will work out fine."

I waited on the phone while Sophie sent the love and peace her mother needed. I could feel that her mother was finally at peace.

We were talking about this for some time, when I had a second spiritual contact. This time it didn't take me long to know who it was. It was Sophie's father, and he was in the same situation as her mother. He was also still conflicted and hadn't found the peace he needed and deserved when he died.

I told Sophie what was going on and suggested that she should do the same for her father as she did for her mother. "Send him Love and Peace." So she did.

Sophie told me later, that a lot of the pain and anxiety that she carried in her heart for as long as she could remember had eased. She felt that as she sent her parents that healing love and peace, it was also healing her.

Could it be that not only does the Soul benefit from the healing you do for them after they leave here, but as it flows through you, it also heals you? Does this help clear up residual energetic remains, which may be affecting the descendants and loved ones here?

So to answer my original question as to whether the departed need our help, I believe in certain circumstances, yes they do. And not only do they benefit from what you do for them, it can also help heal you.

SAYING A BIG 'THANK YOU'

Our special thanks to Chris Gerrett, Shayz Yu.en, Monica Subai, Lydia Duke and other thoughtful DSV Members who have so generously donated fabulous items to the DSV for our shop and for our raffle prizes. We also appreciate many others for their time in assisting us.

DIRTY DOWSING

By Maggie Lowe. Reprinted with the kind permission of the Dowsters Society of NSW. This article first appeared in the Journal of the British Society of Dowsters, Sept 2005.

After attending the Dowsters Society of NSW "Learn to Dowse" seminar, I had my first "Eureka!" dowsing moment.

My challenging, rocky Blue Mountains garden consumed me with frustration when plants didn't get started, much less thrive. Digging a planting hole for a small plant produced pebbles, stones and occasionally a rock requiring mattock and crowbar.

About to plant a native mint bush, the penny dropped - "use the pendulum".

Question: "Is my chosen spot suitable for this plant?"

Answer: "No." So I asked the pendulum to swing in the direction of a suitable place. A very positive swing uphill, using my belly button as reference for left and right.

Q: "How many paces?" A: "5" there was a suitable spot.

Q: "Are there many rocks?" A: "No." I planted. It thrived!

Questions, since refined:

Q: "Will there be any rocks, can I easily remove them?" Now I ask only to be shown places with few, easily removed rocks.

Q: "Is this hole the correct depth, too deep, too shallow?"

Q: "Show me the ideal orientation for this plant."

I rotate the plant around in the hole until the pendulum gives the most positive swing, then plant in that orientation. The more specific the questions, the better the answers.

I now ask when purchasing, whether the plant is suitable for the intended spot. If not, I don't even buy it. Native plants are food sources and refuge for many mammals, birds, lizards, snakes, frogs, insects, all of which inhabit my garden and create the microclimate for healthy interdependence.

My ultimate garden pendulum is a loop of strong cord, long enough to be easily removed over the head. On a shorter cord, a heavy pendulum is attached by a clip (like on a dog lead), to the neck cord. I can bend over and use the pendulum still attached to my neck or disconnect the small part for finer control.

I dowse for specific dilution and application rates for nutrients, soil conditioners, ingredients for potting mixes, the right time to plant, prune, fertilise and which type of mulch to use. My garden prefers a particular type of mulch applied in summer but not in winter. I would never have known this without the wisdom of the pendulum.

Check whether the fertilizers, herbicides and insecticides (if you use them) are creating acidity in the soil or killing micro-organisms. Home gardeners contribute to many soil problems in their ignorance of the cause. You don't need to. DOWSE IT!
